Today's City Moves includes Planet Smart City, Newton and Vectura

Planet Smart City

Affordable housing specialist Planet Smart City has appointed Cristiano Radaelli as its chief innovation officer. Radaelli will also take over as chief executive of Planet Idea, the firm's global competence centre based in Italy. In the role he will work on developing smart solutions in Planet Smart City's four key areas: architecture and planning, digital technologies, environment, and social innovation. Cristiano has extensive experience in digital technologies and transformation, and currently serves as vice president of Anitec-Assinform, a national association for information and communication technology companies in Italy. He has previously held global roles at GTE, Siemens, Nokia and Italtel and is a board member at trade association Digital Europe.

Newton

Newton Investment Management, part of BNY Mellon Investment Management, has appointed Ilga Haubelt as head of equity opportunities. Ilga will be based in London and report to Curt Custard, Newton's chief investment officer. The appointment follows Newton's move to divide its active equity team into two hubs —equity income and equity opportunities. In her newly-created role, Ilga will oversee the team responsible for all of the company's active equity strategies that are not managed on an income basis. Haubelt joins from Deka Investment, where she was head of global equities, overseeing assets of more than £12bn and managing the firm's largest equity fund. She will join Newton on 4 November.

Vectura

Pharmaceuticals firm Vectura has appointed Will Downie as chief executive and executive director with effect from 7 November. Prior to joining Vectura, Will spent 10 years as senior vice
